

Benefit from a rapid increase in fashion accessory output in Vietnam

Published: February 2012

Increasing demand from traditional and new export markets is driving the fashion accessories industry in Vietnam. The sector has registered dramatic growth in terms of revenue over the past two years and is expected to sustain its solid performance in coming months.

The quality of labor in Vietnam is one of its strongest competitive advantages. Suppliers typically hire skilled workers who have gained expertise in various manufacturing processes. In addition, the cost of manpower in the country is comparatively lower than those in China and other sourcing centers in Southeast Asia.

The industry emphasizes the low-end and midrange price segments since models under these classifications enjoy high demand and normally do not require expensive production equipment.

This report focuses on the main types of fashion accessories from Vietnam – fashion bags and wallets, gloves and hosiery, and head- and neckwear.
